TOOK WATCH AND CHAIN

WHILE HIS FRIEND SLEPT. Hector McClure Dodged the Police but Was Captured in a Cross Country Run by Chief Murphy-Property Recovered and William Gorton Arrested

There was plenty of life in and ac not the city hall and police station soon after 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon. Hector McClure, who had been arrested and was beling taken to police station by Policeman Irish, charged with theft, was walking beside the official when he saw his opportunity and mide a dash up Union street from a point in Broadway. This break was anticipated from within police station, where the chief had been watching McClure's actions in edging away from the policeman as they came across the street. The chief at once hustled through the courthouse into Union street, hadling a team there and while hot after the fellow was seen by McClure, who dodged into the yards on the east side of the street. The chief by going through Shepard's lane headed him off and located him hiding in a yard near there. The affair caused a large crowd to congregate.

McClure had been arrested on the complaint of D. J. Twohig of the East Side, who said that McClure and a man named Gorton were at his house and for them he had cooked a meal. There had been some drinkables and Mr. Twohig dozed off. When he woke up he found his watch and chain gone and McClure missing. He reported the matter to the chief, who sent Twohig out with Policeman Irish, and they found McClure at a Both street saloon. After he had been captured and been searched a pawn ticket was found on him he had been captured and been searched a pawn ticket was found on him

Island, and in a published volume of his letters is found one written from the Merchants' hotel and referring to that terrible disaster.

Subsequently the hotel was conducted by James Ward and by Mr. Phelps, the present cashier of the Merchants National bank. The funeral of the elder Phelps took place from the hotel and was very largely attended, owing to his great popularity thorughout this section of Connecticut.

When the hotel property was sold for other uses, its front was entirely altered and for many years now the building has been in its present form, occupied for stores, officers and halls.

Other Building Operations.

At the First National bank it is expected that the constractor will start within a very few days on the work of tearing out the present front and putting in a new and handsome front for the three floors.

A large derrick has been raised at the Cheisea bank building site, and the engine set ready to be put into operation when required.

With the exception of a section in Shetucket street giving access to the cellar, the new walk about the Shannon building has been completed, and is in use, much to the delight of the many people using that side of the street. The walk is reinforced and has a slight slope to carry off the water. The work on the stores in the annex has been rushed, and one is nearly ready for occupancy. The windows are in for both of them, while the lettering has been placed on the windows for one of them.

In Chestnut street the building standing on the property where the new Bard Union building is to be erected has been torn down and within a very short time the contractor will be at work erecting the new factory.

George P. Madden has had plans made for the remodeling of his store in Main street, giving him a new front and inside fixtures.

The Blinderman property, in Franklin square, has been soid to Messrs. Markoff & Cramer, and some changes in that property are anticipated.

Kies Co. will obtain about ten feet added width for a big window at the front. The west stairway in the building, which has been the entrance to the Holiness Mission rooms and the offices of Attorney William H. Shields, is to be taken out, thus providing the extra room. Entrance to the upper stories will all be by the east stairway, which has been provided with double swinging door instead of the old single door. A wide hallway on the second floor also has been cut through to made a good approach to the rooms in that part of the building. Up and down this stairway which is being removed has passed many persons of national fame, including President Jackson and Daniel Webster.

Much of historical importance in the annals of the city attaches to the Austin building, as it is now called, and indeed to the spot where the present alterations are being made, as the building dates back to the year 1797 for the time of its erection as a hotel, and from its front porch President Andrew Jackson made a speech to an immense concurse of people about the year 1895. The incident is fresh in the recollection of William D. Manning of Grove street, who has referred to it in conversation with Attorney William H. Shields, who for thirty-five years has had his law offices in the building, occupying the part that used to be the hotel parlors. One incident in connection with President Jackson's speech was that one of the beautiful daughters of United States Senator James Lanman crowned President Jackson with a wreath and received in return a kiss from the president, bestowed with

The hotel was erected by an association of the citizens who made up a company with 104 shares of $100 each, erecting a building which was said to be unequalled for its day in grandeur of appointments. Newcomb Kinney, one of the owners, was for many years in charge of the hotel, which in time was known as the Kinney hotel and later as the Merchants' hotel. In 1846, when Wheaton Cottrell kept the hostelry, the nknown as the Merchants' hotel, Daniel Webster was a guest here, arriving two days after the sinking of the steamer Atlantic off Fishers

Lack of Male Stenographers.

Nathan B. Stone president of the Yale business college, 116 Church street. New Haven, reports a growing scarcity of young men who take up this important subject.

Mr. Stone says: "Calls come to our office almost every day for young men stenographers who can also write a plain, business hand. Over thirty applications have been received since January first and only a small number of them filled, owing to the limited number of young men qualifying in these subjects.

"If our boys, ranging in age from 16 to 30, knew of the absolutely certain opportunities for advancement offered them in the business office, they would not hesitate to sacrifice a few months' time in equipping themselves in shorthand and typewriting. Several of the young men, who have graduated from our school within the past five years, are earning salaries of from $1,200 to $2,000 a year. The Yale business college has an evening school for those who work in factories, stores, etc., during the day."

Because of the raid of Wednesday night there was a large number in the city court on Thursday morning. The case against A. C. Racine, charged with embezzlement was continued until April 23. It is claimed he took until April 23. It is claimed he took $92 from Lafayette council of the St. Jean de Baptist society, of which he had been treasurer and president. Following a conference of Judge Brown, City Attorney Hall and Attorney Comstock, the cases against five of the keepers of houses of ill-fame were presented to the court by the city attorney, regarding the violation of the liquor law. At the request of the counsel for the accused, the cases were continued until April 23.

The cases against the six women-keepers of bagnios were then called, and City Attorney Hall addressed the court regarding the matter, considering that a substantial fine would satisfy, saying that if there was a contest it might be difficult to prove the charges, as the testimony of the police would have to be relied on, Attorney Comstock called attention to a su-Comstock called attention to a su-would have to be relied on. Attorney Comstock called attention to a supreme court decision wherein it was found that in a similar case if reputation was solely depended on, conviction might not have been sustained. He spoke of the reputation of such places and how they are regarded, and entered a demurrer to the charge. This was overruled and the judge was informed that Marion Morse and Maud C. Young had been before the court before as keepers.

Judge Brown declared that the court was not run for revenue and would not be under him. Prosecutors, he said, differ in opinion about cases, and it is not always the opinion of the lower court is sustained higher up. He considered the officers did their full duty, the idea being to protect society from the evils prevailing in our midst. He expressed sympathy for the unfortunates and said that it was his duty to make a distinction between those in the court for the first time and those who had been there before.

In the cases against Marion Morse and Maud C. Young he sentenced them for thirty days in jail and taxed them the costs. Each took an appeal and furnished $200 bonds. The Morse woman served sixty days last year and the Young woman has her appeal still pending in the original court of common pleas, having been sick when he case came up. The other keepers, Cora Mahoney, Frankie Leon, Annie Davis and Julia Dombrey, were fined $75 and costs amounting to $83.50 in each case, which was paid.

case, which was paid.

The eighteen inmates were fined $15 and costs each, amounting to $22.62 apiece, and their fines were paid, the total receipts being $74110. Viney Nordiby, alias Malady, who has a continued case in the superior court, claimed that she was a cook in a Water street house, and was allowed to go, as was a woman named Brown, who said she was a cook on Summit street.

The liquor taken in the raid, with the large quantity taken in the Carbony raid, is all in Chief Murphy's office, which looks like a well-stocked barroom. writes as follows;

"Whenever I was obliged to go without coffee for breakfast a dull, distracting headache would come on before noon. I discovered that, in reality, the nerves were crying out for their accustomed stimulant.

"At evening dinner I had been taught by experience that I must refrain from coffee or pass a sleepless night. While visiting a physician and his wife I was served with a most excellent beverage at their dainty and elegant table, and upon inquiry, discovered that this charming beverage was Postum and that the family had been greatly benefited by leaving off coffee and using Postum.

The activities of President Taft's administration in dealing with international affairs have been directed with conspicuous success to practical ends rather than to the discussion of the purely legal and techincal problems which arise between nations. While adding to the sum of international good will and harmonious understanding, the director of our foreign affairs under this administration has been able to bring about very tangible and uncommonly valuable results, which have enormously enhanced the possibilities of our foreign commerce.

An Over-supply.

That the United States is flooded with poorly trained and therefore incompetent doctors and lawyers will be shown in the forthcoming report of the Carnegie Foundation for the advancement of education. The report will show there are in the state of California four times as many physicians in proportion to the population as in Germany. In small towns of 3,000 or 4,000 inhabitants one finds four or five doctors and as many lawyers struggling for a living. Henry S. Pritchett, president of the foundation, says: "The evil effects of turning out an army of poorly educated doctors, who must learn on the public, are apparent. The evil of the same conditions in the legal profession is less obvious, but just as serious."

Here in Mexico the same tendency to overcrowd the learned professions is noted, and the consequences are lamentable, for large numbers of youngment are thrust forth into the community where they endeavor in vain to make a reasonably comfortable living. Many drop out of their profession and take up humble employments, and so years of studious effort are practically wasted.—Mexican Hereid. Postum.
"I was so in love with it, and so pleased with the glimpse of freedom from my one bondage of habit and so thoroughly convinced that I ought to break with my captor, that upon my return home I at once began the use of Postum and have continued it ever since since.

"I don't know what sick headache is now, and m-nerves are steady and I sleep sound, generally eight hours. I used to become billous frequently and require physic; now seldom ever have that experience.

"I have learned that long boiling is absolutely essential to furnish good Postum. That makes it clear, black and rich as any Mocha and Java blend. Please withhold my name, but you may use the letter for the good it may do." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in page. "There's a Reason."
